Uncork the wine, and let's get started. Quick 10 says it can get out the most stubborn stains. With the help of 9 News Anchor Coleen Nelson, we're making a mess.

We've got make-up, mustard, some salsa, and a little grape jelly. We let the stains soak in, and head over to Coleen's real carpet, where we find a stain left by her adorable pooch, Megan, who is known for an unusual appetite and very weak stomach. Coleen's been trying to get this stain out for weeks. After a little scrubbing, it's working! It's coming right off onto the towel.

Coleen says, "It seems to really be coming out, I used a different product on it originally, and it was still there, and I accepted that it was going to stay there. This is amazing."

How will it do on the other stains? We spray each stain, and start to scrub, and blot, and blot, and scrub. After treating each stain twice, here's what we ended up with. The mustard stain is still lingering, as is the grape jelly. A little more scrubbing would probably do the trick. But, the wine is gone, it's hard to find the makeup, and the salsa is almost non-existent.

Overall, Coleen gives Quick 10 a 7 out of 9. She's especially impressed by its ability to knock out pet stains.

Coleen says, "I've never been able to find something to get pet stains out like this."

The proof is in the towel we used, it's covered in the stains we removed. At $10 a bottle, Coleen says, it's money well spent.
